Dr. Tolley Recalls College Of 1928

The first Dean of Brothers College and now Chancellor of Syracuse University, Dr. William Tolley returned last week on the occasion of his giving the first series of Arlo Ayres Brown Lectures.

"Arlo Ayres Brown became President of Drew while I was Dean. We were close friends, he was almost like an older brother to me. I was closely associated with his selection as President. When I was invited to give the Arlo Ayres Brown Lectures, I was deeply honored and proud to accept," remarked the man who had been College Dean from 1928 to 1932.

President Robert Oxnam, who was here for the lectures, described Chancellor Tolley as "one of the great educators of our time. He is a person of unusual perception."

His first visit to the campus since 1938, Chancellor Tolley described his reactions to the new building as amazement and admiration. "Where the new campus is, even the underbrush was unclear when I was here."

"I was glad to see James McClintonck and Sherman Plato Young. They are the only ones who were here when I was," remarked Dr. Tolley about his friends on the faculty.

Speaking of the change from an all male college to co-educational, he said, "Right from the beginning of the college I believed that it would come to include women. I was very happy when I learned that it did."

"I remember the Baldwin brothers. They were magnificent in complete honesty, magnanimity, and outlook. They shared everything, going to Cornell together, and later living in the same house. One of the things that would surprise people who met them was that one was a Republican and the other a Democrat. Although they spent their lives together and never let politics interfere with their personal relationship, they always retained their basic individuality."

Bob Cohen, Bob Warwick, Paul Friday, and George Hoag anxiously awaited 9 p.m. debut of WERD last Tuesday in Sam Bowne studio.

Officials Comment On Radio WERD Debut

With the opening bars of John Phillip Sousa's "Washington Post March," WERD came alive at 9 p.m. on Tuesday, April 3. George Hoag delivered an official welcome on behalf of the station to the campus audience and proceeded to introduce several campus celebrities including Dean Allen Weatherby, Mr. John L. Pepin, Treasurer, Dr. Robert F. Oxnam, President-elect, and Leonard Seldman, Student Council President.

Dean Weatherby complimented the ability and persistence which the station organizers have shown, and singled out Bob Cohen, station manager and chairman of the Student Council Radio Station Committee, for his particular persistence in establishing the station.

The Dean went on to say that, as with the experience of national newspapers and radio stations, he felt that the Acorn and radio station will compliment one another and will enjoy a long and fruitful cooperation. Speculating upon the possibilities of a Drew television station in the somewhat distant future which would enable students to receive lectures while lying in bed, he commented that they might remember that, "In the beginning was WERD."

Mr. Pepin stated that "When first approached about a radio station, I was somewhat less enthusiastic. . . . I knew from past experience in other colleges that it would be a difficult job. I am more pleased that the students here show much more interest and persistence." Pepin also suggested that the involvement of designated academic departments of the college would insure longer life to the "experiment."

Dr. Oxnam, addressing the student body as a whole for the first time, said, "It is a particular pleasure for me to be able to participate in the opening of WERD and to share with you in starting a most important educational enterprise. In the modern day it is imperative that communication be adequate. . . . You have a unique opportunity on this campus to mold opinion. . . . in a very effective manner."

Speaking for the student body, Leonard Feldman stated "The opening of this station is one of the most significant expansions of extra-curricular activities along with expansion of the university as a whole. . . . The Council, I feel, deserves credit for recognizing the advantages and opportunities of a radio station, one which I feel will be a success."

Feldman further commented that two of the major advantages of the new radio station would be a closer binding of the college to the university, and greater collaboration of large numbers of the student body.

Filling the final slot in the opening ceremonies, Robert Cohen traced the history of the radio operation from a bull session six months ago in the New Men's Dorm, through a $40 appropriation from E.C.A.C. to "experiment with a radio station," to the opening bars of the "Washington Post March," as the station made its debut.

Juniors Expand Weekend Plans

The coffee shop was the scene of top-level planning sessions last week as frantic juniors crystallized their ideas for the approaching "Town and Country" Spring Weekend on May 5 and 6. Following the momentous decision to adopt this new theme the juniors thoughtfully sipped long draughts of coffee before scrutinizing their wanng class budget to see if the sagging treasury could withstand the expense of a coffee hour on Saturday morning. It couldn't, so Mr. Schumaker munificently agreed to provide coffee and doughnuts without charge, enabling the class to continue with its gala schedule of costly events.

The weekend will begin officially at 4:00 p.m. on Friday afternoon, May 5, 1961 when radio station WERD will reveal the identity of the queen and her court, followed by a motorcade escorting the weekend royalty around the campus free-ways. Students attending the formal on Friday night will dance to the music of the Suburbanites from 9:00 until 1:00 at the Hotel Suburban in Summit. The juniors promise fresh spring flowers on each table in the ballroom, which features a romantic promenade deck.

Saturday will begin with the coffee hour from 10:30 until 11:00 in the University Center. At 2:00 Drew will play Newark Rutgers on the baseball diamond at Young Field, followed by an extraordinary jazz concert in the courtyard of the University Center from 4:00 until 6:00. After dinner a spring water ballet will be performed in the Baldwin pool from 7:00 until 8:00.

The Informal will take place in the University Center from 9:00 until 12:00, topping off the weekend with an evening of dancing to the noted Barry Miles All-Stars. "Summer cottons for the women will be appropriate for this dance," suggests Junior Class social chairman Judy Gravell, who reminds women that Dean Morris has granted 1:30 permission for the Informal and 2:30 for the Formal.
